

What's Next

M: Michael

K: Kristine

0:05 K: I was thinking that I've never you know met the people in education in our province who are

0:13 M: Yeah

0:13 K: leading and so that would be kinda neat, right?

0:17 M: Yeah, it's on my it's on my list Kristine. It's on my list. I thought about that, and you know specifically a tour of Indigenous sites in in Saskatchewan and schools.

0:29 K: Schools?

0:31 M: And but I thought about that like literally go on a bus and take you know, take them to Onion Lake, take them to Poundmaker. Take them up to the LaLoche. Take them over to Peter Ballantine. You know PA.

0:42 K: Hutterite colonies as well. I've taught students from Hutterite colonies and that's always a really neat experience to go and visit and spend some time with them.

0:51 M: Yeah. For sure. Yeah, For sure. Well, and I think that's, that's a whole other dimension is the study abroad at home and, and seeing your own country is also, also as a series of many borders, as bordered, you know, different, different borders within kind of thing. And I think, especially when you're when you're going on to First Nations communities, you're literally entering nations within, within, the, you know, the larger country of Canada. And that's, so you are crossing borders. Even though they're, they're internal domestic, domestic borders, and I think to give people that sense, and that experience would especially, you know, educational leaders and, and educators would be that would be really, really impactful experience to be able to visit and, and the number of different communities across the province. Yeah. So there's lots of opportunities Kristine. No doubt about it, no doubt about it and I've also thought that that would be, but you know potentially a source of revenue for First Nation communities hosting. There's opportunities there.